As even Gods might taste." The poet, as a student in the school of fine arts, though he excels in his special department, is generally well acquainted with all the branches of that school; and, beyond a doubt, the author of the verse quoted at the head of this article, was an adept in the science of harmonical sounds, and was thoroughly conversant with the effects produced upon the mind by the various dependencies and relations of sounds to each other. And, as he could offer his song with such nice sentiment and artistic grace, most supremely surprised would he have been, to have heard the sounds with which the streets of Alexandria were redolent on Thursday night last, had he been informed of the purpose for which they were produced-for most assuredly he would have remained ignorant upon that point, unless some one in the erowd from which the sounds proceeded, had informed him.

Now, the idea foreibly impinges itself upon my brain, that the signification of a word should at least approximate that of the word from which it is derived, and as serenade is proximately deducible, etymologically, from the Latin serenus-signifying calm, serene, soothing-judge of my asignishment, when, after I o'clock upon the night named. I was awakened from a deep sleep-into which, after several hours of hard striving. I had fallen—by the furious beat of ticularize, but through the instrumentality form currency. the drum, (both basso and kettle,) the marshal clashing of cymbals, and the harsh grating sounds of the trombone-"Rending, with tremendous sounds, my ears asunder. With drum, trombone, with cymbals, and with thunder."

In alarm, I sprang from my bed, and rushed to the window; but before I had applied my dexter ear to the broken pane, through which the soft and balmy zephyrs of March find entrance to my sleeping apartment (!) -"Sweep on ye bitter winds!"-several thoughts had revolved in my mind, around the common centre of astonishment. I at first imagined that an insurrection had been discovered, and that the citizens were being called out to suppress it; then, that the merchants, who are opposed to the one per cent, tax, were marching out of town with mar-Guard;" then, that the contest going on in sumed the militant apparel, and that the partizans of each were rushing to their respective standards; then came the flash only, the city, the sounds ceased. Ah! now, thought I, the delightful strains of a well cultivated barytone solo-some Brignoli, perhaps, as yet to fame unknown-will swell and vibrate upon the midnight stillness. And as the mere mention of the word serenade calls up before me the image of an

The loud discussions which here ensued, interlarded and explained with many classic phrases and expletives, afforded to me no sufficient consolation for the loss of my anticipated solo. So, thoroughly disappointed, and completly chilled, I retired, mentally consigning all ill-advised serenades to the depths below. "Nulla venenato litera mixta jeco est." GUTTA.

AUCTION SALES.

SALE THIS DAY. FARM AT AUCTION -ON MONDAY, THE TWENTY-SIXTH INSTANT, at 4 o'clock, P. M., the undersigned will offer at public sale, on the premises, his FARM, lying in Fairfax and Al-exandria Counties, the DWELLING teing in the former, containing about ONE HUN-DRED ACRES, and being about six miles from Washington, 44 from the Georgetown Aqueduct, and 7 from Alexandria, near the Leesburg Turnpike, and on the road leading to George'own and Wash. ington. There are about 30 acres well covered with forest, comprising an abundant supply of timber and fuel; a good proportion of bottom and meadow land, and a fine thrifty apple orchard of more than 100 bearing trees, selected for this cli-mate, and between four and five hundred peach trees, 200 of which have just come into bearing, and on all of which the fruit (elsewhere generally destroyed) is at present safe. The lefty and sommanding situation of this place, the best in this respect in the county, makes it peculiarly valuable for orchard purposes. There are, in bearing, some choice Pears, chiefly Bartlett and Seckel, Cherries, Apricot, and Plum. There is a small flower garden well stocked with choice Roses and Shrubbery. The dwelling is surrounded with the TOOTHACHE, shade of original forest trees. There is a fine well of pure cold water close to the kitchen. Episcopal, Methodist, Presbyterian, and Baptist Churches, as well as a Post Office and Schools are within convenient walking distance, the place being about I mile from the village of Falls Church. The buildings, house, barn, woo'l-shed, and grana-
